A BIT ABOUT ME

I am an experienced facilitator, energetic role player and a committed coach. I enjoy people; listening to and telling stories, connecting through learning and the development journey which we are all on. I find that my instinctive use of vulnerability and humour create excellent rapport both in and outside of the workplace.

MY VALUES

My core values are honesty and kindness, aiming for authenticity and compassion in all encounters. In these challenging times, I believe that more than ever we need to bring our humanity to work with us. I am convinced that we all have the power to facilitate positive change.

BACKGROUND

A 20-year career in education, and a quest to make a difference, has taken me to far-flung corners of the world, including a girls' refuge in Cambodia, a jungle orphanage in Guatemala, and to teacher-training programmes in rural China.

In 2015, I transitioned into the Learning and Development space in a corporate context and have since facilitated groups both large and small across the APAC region. I am fascinated by how we learn, the ways we make and break habits, and the impact of experiential learning.
